men, hence there are 1,500 unemployed.

There are about one hundred firms in this city employing brickingers, lifty-five of whom are ten hour men, about ten are standing out and waiting for their jobs to be ready for brickingers, leaving about thirty-five who are employing eight hour men, and these are rapidly working out and will hereafter employ ten hour men. We say the men will not become because they were unjust, in that while they demanded everything they conceded nothing. They raised the wages by an one underduction and did not even propose to remove any of the odious rules enforced by them, which rule we will enjose in this article. The principal reasons why the will not succeed is, that by the strike we have discovered that there are men enough in the neighboring states to supplant such of the society men who will not work. Workmen are coming in rapidly from the coming and before the end of this month our work will be avoiring along proparerously.

The societies prove this fact, for they assert that they have bought off at least 100 men who came here for employ-sent.

bought off at least 180 men who came here for employments fact is fully established, viz:—That there are men enough to be obtained to do all our work ifglumnolested as d allowed to work, and it is our purpose to apply the remedies quarranteed to us as etitzens, that we and our men may follow our business without molestation.

The master masons in opposing this strike have not opposed it chiefly because it was a strike for eight hours; but on account of the vital principles connected with and affecting it, as exhibited in the unjust rules of which we complain. It was well understood that strike should follow strike until (as was asserted by a society member) §19 per day would be demanded, if there was a possibility of getting it.

Our business had become burdensome to us, and we felt that it would be better to be without business than to continue any longer in a calling which we could not control, being simply tools in the hands of our employes to perform their beheats, as will be seen by the rules referred to.
